Subject: Microsoft Settlement

Dear Sir,

I feel that it is imperative that microsoft terminate its monopolistic practices. That is the only result of the settlement that I will consider acceptable. I do not pretend I have any idea about the best way to accomplish this; I leave such judgments to you. However, that Microsoft might continue to parlay its dominant position in computer software into dominance in other markets is unacceptable. Moreover, microsoft clearly has acted in an anti-competitive manner on numerous occasions, without remorse or any sign of a willingness to modify this behavior, and as such should suffer consequences. The penalty must be damagingly stiff, or the damages that microsoft has caused others must be reversed. Perhaps packaging Netscape, not internet explorer with their next 10 million windows sales might help mitigate one of the many anti-trust infractions. But do not back down from justice.

Yours,

Matthew Motley
